CLIMATE

Typical local climate is moderate, transient, characterized by frequent changes of weather, because over the Poland clash dry air masses from the Eurasian continent and moist air from the Atlantic. The climate is also influenced by the very advantageous geographical location of Krakow - in a valley between the Karpaty and the upland areas and in the valley of the Wisla river. This causes the frequent occurrence of fog (about 60 days a year) and large changes in atmospheric pressure.

The average year temperature is 8 - 9°C. The lowest indications of thermometers usually appear from mid-January to mid-February (the average January temperature is app. -3°C). The warmest and most sunny months of the year are July and August (average July temperature is app. 18°C).
